A Variety Of Divination Arts

Divination can be explained as the action or practice of divining, the foretelling of future events or discovery of what is hidden or obscured by supernatural or magical means. Also an exercise of this, a prophecy, an augury.

AEROMANCY

This form of divination looks to the air and sky for inspiration particularly concerning itself with cloud shapes, comets and other phenomenon not normally visible in the heavens.

ALCHEMY

The much sought after but never achieved practice of transmutation of base metals into precious metals (e.g. gold or silver) with the aid of an esoteric third substance is a form of divination, seeking as it does to use 'divine' knowledge to alter things.

ALEUROMANCY

Anyone who has ever eaten a fortune cookie has knowingly or unknowingly indulged in Aleuromancy whereby answers to questions are rolled into balls of dough, which once baked are chosen at random by those who have questions to ask.

ASTRAGLOMANCY

A method of selecting a path through the future; uses special dice that bear numbers and letters on their sides.

ASTROLOGY

Those who practice this, one of the oldest, most popular and scientific forms of divination, look to the Sun, the Moon, the planets and the stars, and their position and passage through the sky to tell on whom the Sun will be shining in the future. The Babylonians practised the art, and it is more or less accepted by most people who have looked at the relevant research with an open mind that the Great Pyramid and other mausoleums in the Nile Valley were built with astrology very much in mind.

BIBLIOMANCY

Diviners who practise this particular skill, use books to thumb their way through the library of the future. A question is asked, the chosen book is opened at random, and the words on which the eye first falls are then interpreted to answer the enquirer.

CARTOMANCY

Competing with astrology for the Number One spot in the top twenty of divination (in the West at least). Cartomancy in any of its several forms uses cards to answer the questions that those who wish to look into the future ask. The cards may be those in an ordinary playing pack, or a specially designed one such as the Tarot.

CATOPTOMANCY

This early form of crystal gazing catches moonbeams in a mirror turned towards the Moon and interprets the shapes and patterns they create to form a picture of future events and to answer questions as to which is the best path to tread through them.

CLAIRVOYANCE

Using their gift, which is another form of ESP, clairvoyants 'see' into the future, either during a self-induced trance during which pictures of future events come to mind, or in flashes that can come, unsettlingly, out of the blue. According to one claim, a passenger about to embark on the RMS Titanic had one such sudden clairvoyant experience as she was about to board the doomed liner and refused to sail.

CRYSTALLOMANCY

When we think of divination or, to give it its more common name, fortune telling, one of the images that comes to mind is probably that of an old woman peering into her crystal ball and via it into things to come. Fortunetellers are crystallo-mancers by another name. It need not be a crystal ball: any crystal on which the seer is properly focused can be used. Some crystals are said to have special powers and are used for their own purpose. Sunstone, for example, is reputed to an excellent conduit for those seeking knowledge of future matters of a sexual nature, while rose quartz has the reputation for helping those seeking advice on how to mend quarrels especially with those close to them.

DOWSING

This is the method by which the presence of water or precious metals is divined by using a forked rod that vibrates when held over the spot where what is being searched for is to be found. Hazel is the favoured wood for the purpose. Many people scoff at the very idea of dowsing, but there are too many records of time when it has been used successfully to detect water when all other methods have failed, for it to be derided by non-believers.

GRAPHOLOGY

Handwriting has long been held to provide a key to character analysis. Indeed, some firms have such a strong belief in Graphology, that they will not offer employment to anyone whose handwriting does not come up to scratch.

LECANOMANCY

Lecanomancers gaze into a basin of water hoping that as they reflect on their own or their followers' questions, the answers will be revealed.

LIBANOMANCY

As incense burns, the fumes given off twist and turn in the air, creating endlessly fascinating patterns. It is these patterns that libanomancers observe, hoping to see in them the solutions to whatever it is that troubles them.

ONEIROMANCY

Dream interpretation's proper name, Oneiromancy must be a contender for the oldest form of divination. Maybe the most famous of those with the gift of telling dreamers what their nocturnal imaginings meant is Joseph (and his coat of many colours.) Joseph interpreting the Pharaoh's dream explained that these were the long-range forecast for the farmers.

PALMISTRY

Experts in this ancient art use the line, mounts and shape of the hands, fingers and nails as the basis for their assessment of the character and future developments of those having their palm read. The mounts (or mounds) are each linked with one or other of the planets, marrying palmistry and the equally old art of astrology (see above) in happy unison.

TASSEOGRAPHY

Reading the leaves is one of the most popular forms of amateur divination. After the tea has been enjoyed, the cup is placed upside down on the saucer to drain it completely, and the shapes formed by the leaves are interpreted as pointers to the way things will be. The origins of reading the leaves are obscure, but it is known to have been practised in China for thousands of years, which is hardly surprising as tea-drinking was common for many millennia before it spread to other countries.
